

HOW TO BECOME AN IEA MEMBER

Membership of the IEA is limited to institutes, universities, and ministries of education, which represent and serve education systems around the world. To join the IEA, a national institute must meet four requirements. It must:

- be associated with a strong research tradition, with linkages to educational researchers and practitioners;
- have working relationships with national policymakers;
- have ties to national research funding agencies; and
- represent a total education system.

In some circumstances, an institutional member may represent part of a nation, as has been the case with the Belgian Flemish and French communities. This type of membership must be especially justified.

Member institutions are responsible for implementing or supervising IEA studies within their own countries. Members are required to raise funds for national project costs and for contribution to the international operations of the association. They must also ensure that the national and international IEA study findings are disseminated to a broad audience of government officials, policymakers, researchers, and educators.
